Since JSU’s change to online format in the attempt to comply with social distancing and decreasing the spread of COVID-19, I have had to step out of my comfort zone as we all have. I had one lecture remaining in my class. Thankfully, I have had the opportunity to work briefly with Kaltura and learned how to make video announcements in Cassie Chandler’s session. As a result, I wasn’t super uncomfortable making my lecture a video lecture. The issue I had uploading the lecture was remedied with help from Chris Inman. I have learned to utilize Teams in order to communicate with other faculty. Although I have learned much about the trials and triumphs of moving a traditional course to the online format, I prefer being able to see my students and make connections with them in person in the classroom.
